Unpack the term "global economy." Study in a top business school abroad, choose a specialized program in an emerging economy, or undertake an internship for academic credit. Give yourself a comparative perspective, and a comparative advantage when applying for jobs or graduate school.

Consider your options:

- Direct Enrollment in another university enables you to study alongside local students and have a wide variety of courses
- Specialized Programs offer opportunities to international students to use the local setting as the context for coursework
- *Internship Programs enable you to work in large firms or small start-ups. Complete a project that helps the employer and expands your portfolio. (See "Internships flyer")

Work with your faculty advisor to create the best plan for your studies. Upper-level econ courses abroad can transfer back to the major. AEM students can fulfill major elective and concentration credit. Just ask.
